regarding Vietnamization, the overall policy of the Nixon administration from 1969 through the signing of the Paris Peace Accords in January 1973 that included the gradual withdrawal of US combat troops from South Vietnam. It is that in the wake of the Tet victory and by employing different tactics, the new team on the ground in South Vietnam of MACV commander General Creighton Abrams, Ambassador Ellsworth Bunker, and Bunker's deputy in charge of pacification William Colby achieved considerable success and that by 1972 the military and political situation favored the South Vietnamese government. However, because of what transpired beginning in 1973, following the title of Colby's book, the improved situation that existed in 1972 by 1975 was turned into a Lost Victory. Victory was lost because after Nixon's resignation the United States cut its support of the South Vietnamese government to the point where it was unable to bear the burden of resisting renewed North Vietnamese aggression, which was lavishly backed by the Soviet Union. In other words, as many revisionists put it, the United States "abandoned" South Vietnam. The result, and the title of the definitive book on the subject by George J. Veith (Black April: The Fall of South Vietnam, 1973-1975) was "Black April": the collapse of the South Vietnamese government and the unification of Vietnam under a one-party dictatorship that rules there to this day.
